LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN

Colorado's energy industry was front and center in 2016. And once again, Vital for Colorado played an active role supporting the industry, its employees and highlighted their critical part of our state's economy.

Vital for Colorado continued its robust outreach and engagement program hitting more than 100 community events, business meetings and symposia across the state. These efforts propelled our coalition above the 60,000-member mark making our coalition among the biggest and broadest business groups in the state.

The expanded coalition came at an opportune time as anti-energy activists again set their sights on blocking energy development by amending Colorado's constitution. They launched two initiatives aimed at furthering oil and gas setbacks that would have blocked 90% of the state from energy development and another that would have created a patchwork of laws governing oil and gas development.

While proponents of these measures claimed to be grassroots, the vast majority of their funding came from outside Colorado, including from countries overseas.

Vital for Colorado and our coalition partners stood firm against these ballot petitions helping to build the opposition and inform voters of the consequences these proposed constitutional amendments posed. We worked through our vast network to encourage Coloradans to decline to sign the petitions and persuaded others to remove their names, if they did sign.

These efforts proved successful as Coloradans rejected the anti-energy petitions, which failed to collect enough signatures to qualify for the 2016 ballot, preventing another costly and divisive battle in November.

These proposed anti-energy constitutional amendments – which bore more than passing resemblance to those put forth in 2014 – prompted Vital for Colorado to endorse Amendment 71, which sought to make it harder to amend our state's foundational document. Colorado has one of the easiest constitutions to amend in the nation, and beyond oil and gas, many of Colorado's businesses and industries have been the target of crippling constitutional amendments in the past and have had enough.

The Vital for Colorado board of directors deployed additional resources to support the effort to limit special interest meddling in our constitution and help safeguard our state's business community and citizens.

Vital for Colorado joined with businesses, chambers of commerce, agricultural interests, community groups and other community leaders to amass a powerful alliance to support raising the bar for constitutional amendments. Colorado voters agreed with the proposal and supported Amendment 71 with almost 56% of the vote.

We are proud of our 2016 successes, and we hope to build on them with you in 2017 and beyond. On behalf of our 16-person Board of Directors, thank you for being part of our team and working to make Colorado's business climate the best in the world.

MISSION AND PLEDGE

OUR MISSION

To promote the benefits of energy production in Colorado, highlight energy resource extraction as a critical part of Colorado's state economy, and support a rational, well-regulated, and competitive regulatory environment which allows energy production in the state to thrive responsibly.

7 PRINCIPLES

1. Recognize Economic Benefit

The oil and gas industry is a key driver of Colorado's economy. Last year, the industry supported over 213,000 Colorado jobs and more than $25 billion in economic activity, helping make Colorado the fifth fastest growing economy in the U.S.

2. Be a National Leader

Colorado is a recognized national leader in energy regulation. We have the most comprehensive and stringent environmental rules in the nation, including rules that require disclosure and ensure the safety and transparency of fracking.

3. Maintain History of Safety

Fracking has been safely used in Colorado for more than 60 years and more than 90 percent of all wells today are fracked. Fracking is a transformational technology, opening up more than 100 years of domestic natural gas.

4. Rely on Science, Facts & Data

Policymakers and the public should rely on science, facts and data to guide discussion, not scare tactics and hyperbole.

5. Integrate Backup Sources

Development of natural gas is indispensable to the continued expansion of wind, solar and other renewable forms of energy in the state. Because the wind doesn't always blow and the sun doesn't always shine, natural gas is an integral backup energy source—a cornerstone of Colorado's "all of the above" energy policy.

6. Promote Comprehensive Regulation

Colorado should continue to regulate oil and gas development in a comprehensive, statewide manner, rather than a patchwork quilt of inconsistent regulations. A comprehensive and consistent approach to oil and gas development is the best and only way to ensure that Colorado protects our natural environment while remaining an inviting place for current and future energy investment.

7. Employ Non-Traditional Approach

We oppose attempts to politicize energy regulation, enact wholesale energy bans or create regulatory chaos by repealing Colorado's traditional statewide approach to energy regulation.

We Support Responsible Oil and Natural Gas Development and We Oppose Energy Bans and Patchwork Regulations

Our coalition agrees with the seven principles regarding oil and natural gas development and hydraulic fracturing, or fracking.

These principles are paramount to a vibrant and successful oil and natural gas industry in Colorado.

MAINTAIN COLORADO'S REASONED APPROACH TO DEVELOPING ENERGY RESOURCES By Peter Moore

As published in The Denver Post on December 19, 2016.

After years of engaging stakeholders, vetting energy regulations, and grappling with legal challenges, Coloradans continue to embrace a thoughtful and reasoned approach to responsibly developing our energy resources.

Colorado has some of the toughest, most rigorous environmental regulation of oil and gas in the world, and a welcoming attitude toward new development.

For some fringe environmental groups, the toughest oil and gas regulations in America aren't enough. In 2016, this band of extreme voices tried to attack oil and gas development on multiple fronts.

But time and time again, anti-fracking activists were soundly defeated by the forces of common sense and responsible energy development.

We saw a small faction of legislators continuing to push a rejected, narrow agenda threatening thousands of Colorado energy jobs. Bills aimed at redundant and overlapping regulatory schemes to efforts to thwart mineral rights owners all met the same fate. Each time, Vital for Colorado and other business leaders pushed back against these harmful proposals, stopping the legislation in its tracks. Republicans and Democrats killed these bad-for-business, anti-drilling bills.

Last spring, environmental activists tried to recall a Thornton City Council member for the high crime of, get this, working for an oil and gas company. A handful of the most notorious and well-heeled anti-fracking organizers flooded the community with smears and deceit, only to have voters in Thornton slam the recall door in their face. The Thornton recall failed for not having anywhere near enough signatures.

Undeterred, this summer, many of the same activists pushed divisive constitutional ballot measures that would have cut off 90 percent of the state from developing our energy resources. These narrow interests tapped into hundreds of thousands of dollars from out-of-state environmental groups sharing a common mission of banning hydraulic fracturing. We saw great fanfare when they submitted their petitions to the secretary of state, but later learned that they were submitting many empty boxes with few petitions. Despite this well-funded effort, Coloradans rejected these damaging proposals by declining to sign their petitions.

Not to be outdone, many of the same activists focused their attention and flailing angst at Amendment 71, a bipartisan measure seeking to make it more difficult to amend the state constitution by requiring greater statewide input for constitutional ballot petitions. National environmental groups spent heavily to oppose Amendment 71 equating it to a proxy fight on energy development, even though it was no such thing. Greenpeace even sent its blimp to Colorado to oppose the initiative. But just like their empty petition boxes, the air-filled blimp on loan from Washington, D.C., failed persuade local voters as Amendment 71 passed with over 55 percent of the vote and winning 60 of 64 counties.

The wholesale defeat of anti-fracking extremists here is notable because it's the third year in a row fracking foes have lost. After convincing a couple towns to pass short-term bans on drilling, the environmental community has seen a pair of anti-drilling initiatives wither on the vine in 2014, the defeat of a proposed fracking ban in Loveland, the defeat of multiple anti-energy local candidates in 2014 and 2015, and a 2016 Colorado Supreme Court decision saying the energy bans were themselves illegal and unconstitutional.

Added together, the picture that emerges couldn't be clearer — the cottage industry of environmental groups opposing fracking have been completely and totally rejected by mainstream Colorado. While periodic fights will continue as long as these groups have access to out-of-state environmental donors, the crusaders against responsible energy development have lost credibility with the public because they have lost the debate.

In 2017, Colorado leaders should re-commit to developing energy policy in the right way. That means tough and comprehensive regulation of the industry, and a broad commitment to protecting responsible energy development here for years to come.

LEADING THE WAY TO ENERGY INDEPENDENCE

By Chad Vorthmann

For decades our nation worked to identify strategies aimed at becoming energy independent. Now with the technological advancements in hydraulic fracturing, we're on the cusp of not only energy independence but becoming an energy exporter helping developing nations transition to clean burning fuels.

While many in the urban centers enjoy lower utility bills, the abundance of affordable, homegrown energy development has also reduced operating costs for Colorado's farmers and ranchers. Hydraulic fracturing and horizontal drilling have allowed many farmers and ranchers to maximize their property investments by leasing their surface and subsurface rights to energy developers. This added income supplements off-season family budgets and allows for greater investment opportunities in new and efficient agricultural equipment. These new opportunities help keep family-owned farms productive and attractive for the next generations to remain in rural communities.

Chad Vorthmann, Executive Vice President, Colorado Farm Bureau

Preserving this way of life was a driving force for the Colorado Farm Bureau to weigh in against the proposed hydraulic fracturing bans. Recently, the Colorado Supreme Court agreed with our position and rejected those bans. The justices rightly decided that property owners would be adversely affected by these and any future bans. Specifically, the court's decision says, "Longmont's fracking ban, which limits fracking to those parts of a pool outside city limits, likewise increases the cost of producing oil and gas and reduces royalties." Many Colorado family farms have realized the benefits of these royalty payments, while others are still planning to leverage these opportunities into additional financial investments to repay debt and prepare for the future.

These bans, if upheld, would have created uncertainty for these family farms, robbing them of their property and financial investments. While these bans were only in a handful of towns, the Colorado Supreme Court recognized the writing on the wall saying, "...Longmont's fracking ban may create a 'ripple effect' across the state by encouraging other municipalities to enact their own fracking bans, which could ultimately result in a de facto statewide ban."

With this case behind us, Colorado's rural and agricultural communities need certainty to move forward and continue to identify solutions that balance the needs of all stakeholders. As we realize our country's energy independence and the benefits to rural Colorado, our future has never been brighter.

THORNTON READY TO MOVE PAST DIVISIVE RECALL

As published in The Westminster Window on June 6, 2016.

By Mayor Heidi Williams

Like many cities around the state, Thornton faces a number of challenging and important decisions for our communities and our residents. From economic development to affordable housing to public safety to traffic, we're constantly working together as a city council to make the best decisions for our residents and our city.

Unfortunately, since March this progress and collaboration took a backseat to a proposed recall of one of our councilmembers. A vocal minority of Thornton residents, using extreme bullying tactics and personal insults, pushed the city council to ban energy development within city limits. After hearing from all sides of the debate and discussing the issue with staff, the majority of the city council felt this wasn't the right move for Thornton, especially in light of the fact that we don't have any active permits to drill oil wells within our boundaries and that the state Supreme Court has already ruled that cities can't ban energy development.

For this single vote, these activists took extreme action by pursuing a recall of Councilwoman Jan Kulmann, simply because she's employed by an energy producer, claiming her employment was a conflict of interest. Before the vote, Kulmann correctly sought the advice of our city attorney whose legal analysis determined that Kulmann did not have a conflict of interest and that she had an obligation as a duly elected councilmember to vote on the issue. That should have ended any recall pursuits, but these activists pressed ahead for two months purportedly collecting signatures to recall Councilwoman Kulmann and impose a special election that would have cost taxpayers up to $100,000. This is money that is much better spent on other items that would actually benefit our residents.

For months, the recall served as a distraction to city council and represented the worst in politics.

Luckily, reason prevailed and Thornton voters rejected the idea, standing firmly by Kulmann. Clearly, the fact that recall supporters didn't submit their signatures by the deadline leads me to believe their intent was to intimidate and bully Kulmann and others on city council.

The Thornton City Council was specifically designed to be made up of residents who bring their personal background, expertise and diverse opinions to the city council, which helps ensure the city council makes the best decision for our residents. These different and opposing viewpoints help us create better public policy and ensure different voices are heard.

We face a divisive and frustrating political climate that's turning off voters and potential political participants. Our city should be promoting greater civic engagement and encouraging more of our citizens to serve and run for public office. Sadly, the contention around this recall operates as a deterrent and breeds cynicism we then need to overcome.

With the recall distraction hopefully behind us for good, we must rebuild our spirit of collaboration and get back to the people's business. Thank you for rejecting this bad idea, and I look forward to working with you to continue our progress and make Thornton even greater than it already is.

Heidi Williams, Mayor, City of Thornton

STUDY THE FRACKING PROPOSALS

As published in the Highlands Ranch Herald on May 11, 2016

Guest column by Robert Golden, Mike Kopp and Jeff Wasden

With the Colorado Supreme Court's decision preserving responsible energy development in the state, fringe activists will attempt one final Hail Mary aimed at amending the Colorado Constitution.

Backers of four measures targeting oil and gas development in Colorado have begun collecting the 100,000 signatures necessary for them to appear on the November ballot. If successful, they would essentially eventuate with a patchwork of local regulations that would, in effect, ban fracking, undermine property rights and destabilize Colorado's business environment.

The claim is made that the backers are simply local citizens, merely concerned with protecting their communities. But in reality, their activities are being pushed by out-of-state interests with an agenda quite unlike the citizens of Colorado who welcome the economic boom the oil and gas industry fuels in our state.

Our three organizations, by strong contrast, are deeply rooted in Colorado. We are both local and statewide. Together we represent thousands of the great companies in Colorado who do business across the breadth of the Centennial State. We stand with Vital for Colorado in support of a collaborative, responsive and transparent regulatory system managed at the state level, not the confounding, contradictory one envisioned by some unseen special interest.

While the proposed ballot measures are written to appear reasonable, we wish to be clear: They are de facto bans on fracking.

For example, Initiative 40 would grant unprecedented power to local governments to ban outright any business or industry they don't like, regardless of state, federal or international law.

Initiative 63 is written so broadly that it would potentially empower nearly anyone to drag another into court over an alleged crime against the environment.

Initiative 75 would further politicize the oil and gas industry by granting local governments broad new regulatory powers that could imperil tens of thousands of jobs in a heartbeat.

Initiative 78 would require oil and gas operators to create an incredible buffer zone (called a setback) of at least a half-mile from things like "open space" areas and intermittent streams. When you consider the lay of the land in some parts of the state it is clear that would mean a ban on fracking.

These initiatives are best seen as blunt instruments aimed at hurting a vital Colorado industry. There is a better way. For starters, we need to let the Colorado Oil and Gas Conservation Commission continue implementing the recommendations made recently by the governor's oil and gas task force. The recommendations are the capstone of a great deal of bipartisan work done by members of the environmental community, elected officials and the oil and gas industry. Let's give them a chance to work before considering additional changes.

As the signature-gathering efforts move forward, we encourage readers to consider the impact these measures could have on Colorado, including the loss of: billions of dollars in economic activity, hundreds of millions in tax revenues and tens of thousands of jobs.

We believe the best way to achieve economic prosperity and environmental conservation is through dialogue, collaboration and cooperation, as we've seen with the governor's task force. Let's work together to see that we continue this strong partnership.

Robert Golden is president of the South Metro Denver Chamber of Commerce. Mike Kopp is the executive director of Colorado Concern, an alliance of top business executives with a mission of enhancing the Centennial State's business climate. Jeff Wasden is president of the Colorado Business Roundtable, an advocate for proactive, pro-business legislation that strengthens the economy and allows businesses to grow and thrive in Colorado and the region. All three serve on the board of directors for Vital for Colorado, a coalition of business, civic and economic development leaders along with more than 56,000 Coloradans from across the state dedicated to supporting and promoting the benefits of energy production in Colorado.

RESOLUTIONS

In 2016, activists submitted two ballot proposals that would have blocked 90% of the state from energy development. Vital for Colorado made the case this would have been a blow to our economy and pushed back against these dangerous initiatives. Ultimately, the people of Colorado rejected the petitions and both measures failed to qualify for the November ballot.

Resolution Opposing Ballot Initiatives #75 and #78

Whereas, Colorado's economy is strong and job growth continues at a steady pace, and

Whereas, our state's oil and natural gas industry supports more than 100,000 jobs and contributes more than $30 billion in economy activity to the state, and

Whereas, this industry contributes hundreds of millions of dollars to public services ranging from education to transportation to public safety, and

Whereas, ballot initiative #75 usurps state regulation of energy development in Colorado and threatens private property rights for our state's residents, and

Whereas, ballot initiative #78 establishes extreme setbacks from new oil and natural gas operations that threaten to eliminate these industry jobs and economic contributions, and

Whereas, a recent report by the Colorado Oil and Gas Conservation Commission concludes that the initiative will ban 90% of Colorado from oil and natural gas development, and

Whereas, these setbacks would allow government to take private property, including mineral rights, from Coloradans without compensation, and

Whereas, the economic impact from these initiatives will financially cripple Colorado families both in and outside the oil and natural gas industry.

Now Be it Therefore Resolved, that we oppose ballot measures #75 and #78 and encourage our Colorado residents to decline to sign these petitions.

Sincerely,

LOOKING FORWARD TO 2017

GOAL Establish Vital for Colorado as the preeminent voice for responsible energy development among key non-industry stakeholders.

Generate informational support for Colorado's energy industry

For the past few years, Coloradans have seen local campaigns aimed at limiting the energy industry, a Colorado Supreme Court decision reversing those bans and battles at the legislature. As residents learn more about the energy industry and its impact on our daily lives and the economy, the more they appreciate the contributions by this important industry and its employees.

In 2016, Vital for Colorado organized, or helped support, approximately 100 events and presentations in conjunction with Coloradans for Responsible Energy Development. We'll continue to maintain a robust presence and expand that knowledge to more economic sectors and businesses with Vital for Colorado taking the lead among non-industry stakeholders.

We're already building a new training platform aimed at expanding Coloradans knowledge of the energy industry and looking to deploy that throughout our coalition and future partners.

Build a robust digital community

In 2016, we expanded Vital's presence through our partnership with the Colorado Business Roundtable's Connect and Collaborate radio program. Vital for Colorado's Chairman Peter Moore hosts a regular program on AM 1690 KDMT featuring business and energy leaders focused on telling their stories about why they support Colorado's energy development sector. In its first year, we've featured most of Vital for Colorado's board members and other leaders like the U.S. Chamber's President and CEO of The Institute for 21st Century Energy Karen Harbert, Colorado Oil and Gas Association's President and CEO Dan Haley and Colorado Senate President Bill Cadman.

In 2017, we'll continue this partnership highlighting more guests and proponents of responsible energy development.

VITAL FOR COLORADO SAYS YES ON AMENDMENT 71

Vital for Colorado was an early supporter of Amendment 71 that aimed to make it more difficult to amend Colorado's constitution. Representing businesses and industry across the state, Vital saw Colorado's constitution threatened regularly from divisive and costly proposals that threatened the health of our economy.

"The constitution belongs to all of us - that is why many of the most respected leaders, Republicans and Democrats, city folks and rural folks, are coming together to support Amendment 71. I'm voting yes on 71 too."
— John Salazar

"Amending the constitution is too easy. The current process too often serves special interest groups. Amendment 71 would involve the entire state in the amendment process."
— Governor John Hickenlooper

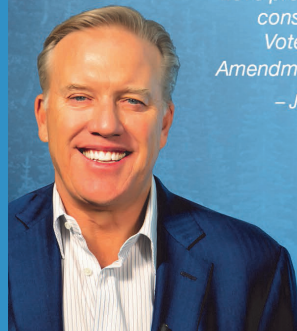

YES ON 71.

Amendment 71 is the one that gives Pueblo, the San Luis Valley, and all of rural Colorado a new voice in their constitution.

Thousands of civic and community leaders from across the state agree – including these leaders you know and trust.

YES ON 71.

"There are a lot of games being played with our constitution. Amendment 71 deserves your vote. Let's raise the bar. Let's protect the constitution. Vote yes on Amendment 71."
— John Elway

"Right now special interest groups only get signatures for constitutional amendments from Denver and Boulder. If you want to amend the constitution, you should have to show support statewide. Amendment 71 would do that. Vote yes on 71."
— John Suthers

THANK YOU TO OUR POWER LUNCH SPONSORS

Vital for Colorado partnered with our restaurant coalition members to drive oil and gas industry employees out to lunch. As the sponsor of the initiative, our aim is to illustrate the financial benefits of the oil and gas industry on the state's economy.
